Abstract:

The APEC process has been facing a number of challenges over the last decade. Waning interests of member economies, increased criticism of making too many lip services, and intensified regionalism activities of member economies all burden the APEC's vision of achieving the Bogor Goals. In parallel with APEC's crises, there have been a number of new initiatives for the Asia-Pacific regional architecture. The presentation summarizes these developments, and discusses scenarios of the future shape of Asia-Pacific regional cooperation.
